Quota International Honored with Two Communicator Awards

(Washington, D.C.) Two Quota International publications were recognized for outstanding work in the communication field in the international 2005 Communicator Awards competition. Quotarian, an annual membership magazine highlighting club successes and events, received an Award of Distinction for exceeding high industry standards in the Non-Profit Magazine category. The organization's website, www.quota.org, received Honorable Mention recognition for its website in the Overall Site category.

The Communicator Awards recognize achievements in communication. In 2005, industry professionals judged 5,078 entries from organizations throughout the United States and several foreign countries, looking for submissions that exceed a high standard of excellence and serve as benchmarks for the industry. Just 19 percent of submission receives Awards of Distinction, while only 10 percent were Honorable Mention winners. Quotarian has been recognized four years in a row, while 2005 marked the first year Quota International's website received accolades.
